Unlikely Stock Whiz Releases His Top 10 Stocks for 2009

Has beaten the S&P every year with an average gain of 21.36% for past five years

Dear Fellow Investor:

I'd like you to meet my friend Paul Tracy – the most unlikely stock whiz you'll ever find.

He's a walking contradiction: a snowboarder from the Texas desert with an investing track record that could make him millions on Wall Street. But he'd rather be hiking the hills or catching a band on the Austin music scene than spending his life stuck in a high-rise.

Five years ago, when we went into business together, he promised me he would double the Dow.

He failed – he's tripled it instead.

You'll see his track record for yourself in a minute – it's all here in black and white.

But first I want to make sure you receive a free copy of Paul's report on his 10 favorite stocks for 2009.

He's been putting out this report for five years now, and his picks haven't just beaten the market... they've killed it – every year. Paul's compounded return is +156.9% versus just +68.1% for the S&P 500.

Every year Paul sends his StreetAuthority Market Advisor subscribers a free copy of this confidential report. You can get your own free copy today.

These Stocks Were a Good Bet Even Before Obama Was Elected ... Now They're a Slam Dunk

Introducing the #1 way to profit from a new President and Congress in Washington

By Paul Tracy, Editor, Paul Tracy's StreetAuthority Market Advisor

You see it again and again. Whenever Washington decides to help a new industry get off the ground, the investment profits follow in lockstep. This holds true whether it's defense, biotechnology, computers, nanotech or any other area.

The government made millionaires out of thousands of early investors in Dell, Oracle, and Amgen, just to pick three. Amgen's +1,000%-plus gains would never have happened if the government hadn't invested heavily in biotechnology in the 1980s. It was a government scientist in fact, partnering with Amgen, who made the discovery that led to Amgen's first blockbuster drug.

When the government began its massive effort to modernize its technology in the mid-1990s, it picked Oracle and Dell as its main suppliers. Investors who got on board those two stocks brought home gains of more than +1,000% in a few short years, turning $100,000 into a sweet million.

If you missed out on these government-fueled bonanzas of the 1990s, don't feel too bad... an instant replay is straight ahead.

A small group of 20 to 30 stocks is going to be flooded with so much new cash that several are likely to be up more than 10-to-1 in the next three or four years. As I'll explain in a minute, there's a very real possibility that a few of the stocks will shoot up 40-to-1. What we're going to do today is narrow those 20 to 30 down to today's two or three best buys while they're still dirt cheap.

Paul Tracy's Top 10 Stocks for 2009 and Beyond

This is the in-depth report that brings you a closer look at Paul Tracy's top investing ideas for the coming year. Since we began publishing it back in 2005, his annual picks have beaten the market every year—delivering average gains of +21.3% per year and outperforming the S&P by well over 2-to-1. By watching our stocks with only the strongest catalysts behind them, Paul's compounded return is +156.9% versus just +68.1% for the S&P 500.

Paul's remarkable consistency gives his StreetAuthority Market Advisor readers a priceless peace of mind. After hundreds of hours of research, due diligence and healthy intra-company debate, Paul's new report on his favorite investments for the next 12 months is now ready for release.

These 10 unique companies are involved in a diverse array of business lines—from car retailing to slot machines to liquor distributors. Yet they all share common traits that should help them deliver exceptional returns for shareholders in the coming year.

Wind Profits: The Four Best Stocks to Own in the World's Fastest-Growing Energy Industry

Whenever Washington decides to help a new industry get off the ground, the investment profits follow in lockstep.

We saw it happen in biotechnology, nanotechnology and the Internet. If you missed out on those government-fueled bonanzas of the 1990s, don't feel bad... an instant replay is straight ahead.

A small group of 20 to 30 stocks is going to be flooded with so much new government cash that a few of them will likely shoot up 100-to-1 in the next three or four years. When you invest in companies on the receiving end of government billions, you don't have to worry about how sharp the CEO is... or if the company's new product will be the "next iPod".

We predict this will be the first stock boom out new Congress will unleash. These companies are immune to nearly all outside economic forces. They have their sales orders on file, in amounts that will set them—and you—up for years to come. Wind stocks were a good bet even before Obama was elected... now they're a slam dunk.

Catalyst Investing: Why a $4.50 Stock Hit $82 in Six Weeks

Every investor has experienced the sinking feeling—you buy a stock, only to watch the shares stagnate for weeks or months on end. Most of the time you can't pinpoint the reason why the stock flounders as the rest of the market passes you by. We've come up with a solution to make sure this doesn't happen to you.

You see, the secret to beating the market isn't just investing in great companies. It's about investing in great companies that are likely to benefit from a catalyst in the near future.

Understanding the importance of the catalyst concept and how it can lead to outsized returns for your portfolio, we created our proprietary StreetAuthority Catalyst Rating system. This report will uncover the ins and outs of our system, and show you exactly how catalysts led to gains of more than +2,000%... helped our portfolios more than double the S&P... and reveal our latest finds using our proprietary rating system.

The Saudi Arabia of Wind

More than $90 billion was pumped into the wind industry in 2007. No other alternative energy comes close. And by the end of 2008, investments in wind-energy technology will hit $85 billion. Over the next five years, the U.S., Europe and China are expected to spend $150 billion on wind projects.

If it's true that successful investing is all about following the money, this is one race that is worth watching. It's certainly got the attention of T. Boone Pickens.

The billionaire oil man is wagering $12 billion on what will be the world's largest wind farm, spanning the Texas panhandle. He has already ordered 667 turbines from General Electric.

A lot of people have made a lot of money following Pickens' lead over the years. This is the man who netted a $2,500 profit/day into America's largest independent oil company, Mesa Petroleum. He's now the 151st richest American and he didn't get that way by making bad bets with his money.

Why has this legendary oil wildcatter hitched his future to wind? Because he knows that the cheap and easy oil is gone for good.

Despite record prices, oil production has actually fallen over the past three years. New oil is just getting too hard to find.

That's the bad news. The good news, as Pickens points out, is that the United States is the Saudi Arabia of wind power.

The Great Plains is home to the greatest wind

How Does $40-to-$1 on Your Money Sound?

2007 was a breakthrough year for the U.S. wind industry. Our total wind-power capacity rose by +45% in a single year, accounting for 30% of all new power production...

The Department of Energy says that wind energy could well generate 20% of U.S. electricity by 2030. When you compare that to today's one half of one percent that's a 40-bagger industry-wide. Which means a few of the best and the brightest wind stocks could easily rise more than 40-to-1 before it's all over.

How do we plan on profiting from the stampede that's toward wind power? Just read on...
